A KANNADA-ENGLISH SCHOOL-DICTIONARY

CHIEFLY BASED ON THE LABOURS OF THE

REV. PR. F. KITTEL

MANGALORE
BASEL MISSION BOOK & TRACT DEPOSITORY
1899
The present work is designed to form a companion volume to the well known and much appreciated English-Canarese School-Dictionary, compiled by the Rev. F. Ziegler. The publication of a Kannada-English School-Dictionary has for a long time been a deep-felt desideratum, as the two smaller editions hitherto extant have but insufficiently served their purpose. The stupendous work of the Rev. Dr. Kittel, the eminent lexicographer of the Kannada language, whose unremitting labours have set a permanent literary monument to the language, standing out in bold features of historical, etymological and philological, critical researches for guidance and instruction to litterateurs striving after Kannada embellishment and scholarship, held out promising inducements and marked facilities to undertake this work which is chiefly based upon it.

Plan and arrangement: To add to the usefulness of the work and to facilitate its use, I deemed it fit to indicate the principles that have been adopted in arranging the matter and when launching on new methods I have attempted rather to err on the side of cautious adherence than on the side of hasty innovation.

I. Orthography: a. Obsolete Letters. These are ए and ो, now universally represented by े and ो, and have been put in parantheses immediately after the words in which they occur to give an insight into their different origin and meaning.

N. B. The double consonant र has been brought to its proper place and is invariably to be looked up under the letter र.

b. Sonnē. The method of using bindu or sonnē indiscriminately before classified (vargiya) and unclassified (avargiya) letters sanctioned by former lexicographers, grammarians and time-honoured practice, has uniformly been adopted, though at variance with the laws of etymology. These laws have not seldom to give way to usage and well-established practice. But, though this convenient mode of representing by sonne the letters n, n and m, when followed by consonants of their own class, and the nasals ŋ, and ŋ has been adhered to, the alphabetical order of words has been maintained uninfringed. Words in which the sonne occurs, appear now in their proper place in the alphabet. This may at the beginning occasion a little embarrassment to those who are accustomed to look up this class of words at the head of each letter, but all difficulty will with practice disappear.

e. Orthography proper is yet a neglected field of study. The colloquial language, legitimately abounding with provincial peculiarities, dialectical whimsicalities and vulgar inelegancies, must ever differ from the written language. The lingua litera should possess a uniform system of spelling, which it has in some respects not yet accepted, but approving of various spellings as authors think fit. The four short vowels ā, ē, ī, ŋ, for instance promiscuously interchange in words like: ಸಾಯಾಸಾಯ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, etc. . . . or ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, etc. . . . or ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, etc. . . . or ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, etc. . . . of ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, etc. . . . or ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, ಸಾಯಾ, etc. As most of these forms occur in books, newspapers and documents, they demand the same attention of being embodied in the vocabulary which is a mere encumbrance to the student. Hence a standard orthography is greatly desired.

II. Compounds. This class of words is very numerous in the Kannada language and materially contributes to its copiousness. The largest number of compounds has been received from the ductile, flexible and infinitely copious Sanskrita language, so peculiarly adapted to form numberless compounds. All compounds, irrespective of their origin, whether of pure Kannada, of Sanskrita, of Tadbhava or of any other tongue, have been treated alike, and subordinated to leading words—a hyphen denoting the division of the members of the compound. Many compounds and especially Kannada compounds, as ಸಾಯಾ.

IV PREFACE.
PREFACE.

had in many instances to be introduced as independent words when the euphonic changes effected in combining the separate parts would involve too great a task to recognise them. Both Samskrita noun-compounds, as of अग्रस, अद्व, अन्तर, etc., as well as adjectival and adverbial compounds, as of अध, अत, अद्व, etc., have been treated in this manner, provided the phonetic changes caused by the sandhi of the two words remained unmodified. Where a phonetic change or an elision or a permutation of letters took place the compound was treated as a separate word.

III. Derivatives: a. Unusual Derivatives. It should be borne in mind that there is, logically speaking, a vast class of derivatives formed by adding to a primary root etymological terminations, inflectional affixes, etc., e.g. ग added to रिस=रिस, निस=निस; or ग added to रिस=रिस, धिस=धिस; or ग added to रिस=रिस, धिस=धिस, रिस=रिस; or ग added to रिस=रिस, धिस=धिस, रिस=रिस; or ग added to रिस=रिस, धिस=धिस; etc. These being difficult to trace to their original constituent parts have, of course, been considered as und erived and treated accordingly.

b. Proper derivatives of abstract and personal nouns, where no hazy uncertainty is felt, terminating in -अ, -ू, -ै, -ं, -र, -व, -वर, -वर्त, -वर्तिन, -वर्तिन -वर्तिन, etc. have consistently been added on to the primary word. In incorporating these derivatives the same method has been employed as with the compound.

Verbal Derivatives of unfrequent occurrence terminating in -अ, as ततस्तिः, सदाकाले, ततफूल, etc. have been exhibited under the primary words ततस्तिः, सदाकाले, ततफूल, etc., however with the alteration of writing the whole word in full to avoid ambiguity and confusion. Verbs of great importance and frequent usage, as: जस, जस, जस, जस, etc., have been introduced as independent words.

IV. Homonyms, of which the Kannada language embosoms a good number, have occasionally been split up under two or three heads, when they obviously and intelligibly belong to different roots bearing the characteristics of distinct derivation.
Homonymous roots involving the sense of a noun, of a verb and even eventually of an adverb, as रूण, रूण, रूण, रूण, रूण, etc. have been treated under one head with their respective grammatical signs.

V. Grammatical significations. For a School-Dictionary it is a most important feature to indicate the parts of speech, the determination of which cannot be left to the discretion of the pupil. The abbreviated grammatical signs have been added after the Kannada word. The treatment of the Sañskrita different verbal derivations that have not yet assumed a definite part of speech in Kannada has been made subject to the same method adopted by reliable Sañskrita lexicographers. The abbreviation for "causative verb", with which the Kannada language can be marvellously enriched, has been expelled as fallen into disuse and where necessary substituted by "००००". The grammatical signs are only added to the leading word and not to compounds or derivatives being in most cases self-evident.

VI. English equivalents. Special attention has been paid to the rendering of the English equivalents. Brevity and conciseness have systematically been aimed at in order to give a ready-made coin. Considerable pains have also been taken to contract and condense the equivalents into as few groups as practicable to facilitate comprehension. Another effort has been made while arranging the several meanings in order to indicate their actual growth and development, beginning, if possible, with the primitive meaning suggested by etymology. It has also been found recommendable not to adduce too many English equivalents to facilitate the choice of the most appropriate one.

VII. Origin of words. The Kannada language is one of the principle representatives of the Dravidian language-family in South-India spoken by upwards of 10 millions. It is however to be remembered that the language, as in fact all languages, being in constant transition and permutation, does not only comprise Dravidian elements but has absorbed various alien ingredients. The most prominent and at the same time formative and constructive factor in the language is the Dravidian which forms the solid groundwork determining the declensional and conjugational and other inflections and supplying the more common, homely and familiar words, as ಎನೆ, ಇಂದೂ, ತ್ರಾವಿದ್, ತ್ರಾವಿದು; ಜೀ, ವಿಜಯ, ಹುಳ್ಳ; ಮಾತ್ರ, ಮಾತ್ರ; ಮುಂದ, ಮುಂದ, etc. Next we have the Sanskrita element which has had a great influence upon the language in enriching its vocabulary, in augmenting its synonyms and in ennobling its composition. The introduction of Sanskrita words dates back to the contact of the Dravidians with the Aryans and supplied the language with almost all its abstract, religious and scientific terms. The Dravidian words are for everyday events and natural feelings, while the Sanskrita are elegant, dignified and artificial, fitted for rhetoric, subtle disputation and the profound expressions of philosophy. Many have retained their unaltered Sanskrita form, whereas others have changed so as to suit the Kannada tongue. The latter class are called Tadbhavas. Next we have a good number of Hindusthani and Mahraṭi words, chiefly relating to feudalism and militia, whose introduction is due to the Moghul and Mahratta conquests of Kannada districts. Some few Portuguese expressions have found their way into the language too, as ಅಪ್ಪ್ಲಾಸ್, ಇಂಜಿನೆಆರ್ ಹೆಸರ್ಸ್, etc. from the Portuguese period. Finally the English language has also commenced to contribute its mite mainly relating to education, jurisprudence and revenue. Some have already become homewords and, as time advances and a smattering of mispronounced English diffuses into the masses, it is but natural that this process of assimilation continues at even a more extensive rate.

To bring out this feature conspicuously it has been thought desirable to mark with the initials of the respective language the words migrated from. The carrying out of this principle has sometimes met with considerable difficulty with regard to words, doubtless of Sanskritic origin, but which had come into Kannada through the medium of another Indian language, as s. ಸ್ವತ್ಥಯಾ = h, ಸ್ವಾಯತ್ = k, ಸ್ವಾಯತ್: s. ನೌದರ್ಶನ್ = m, ನೌದರ್ಶನ್ = k, ನೌದರ್ಶನ್; s. ಸ್ವತ್ಥಯಾ = h, ಸ್ವತ್ಥಯಾ = k. ಸ್ವತ್ಥಯಾ. In such cases the greatest probability has always carried the decision, as no comparative philological studies could be made. It has been the compiler's aim to attain to utmost accuracy with pure Kannada and pure Sanskrita words, whereas with Tadbhavas such an exactitude was unattainable.

As ancient classical literature is extensively read in schools and colleges a considerable number of obsolete and obsolescent words principally occurring in Jaimini Bharata and other poetical works prescribed have been inserted and marked by the letters a. k.

VIII. Fusion of elements. The foreign words that have come into the language do not stand by themselves as an independent class but have become Kannadasised subject to Kannada laws and analogies. But, notwithstanding this metamorphosis the borrowed words, taken as a class, have a peculiar character which separates them even to the feeling of an uneducated Kannada man from the Dravidian stock, thus giving to the language a somewhat heterogeneous aspect. But a still more serious disadvantage is the necessity of expressing new ideas either with the help of Sanskrita or English. The expressiveness and suggestiveness of these terms are hidden from those who are unacquainted with Sanskrita and English, and thus the language suffers in its power of quickening and originating thought.

IX. Conclusion. To secure the greatest possible accuracy and perfection the manuscript copy was, before its print, placed into the hands of R. Ry. Bh. Shiva Rau, the experienced and learned corrector of the Basel Mission Press, whose thorough acquaintance with the great work of Dr. Kittel in having carried it through the press has enabled him to make some valuable suggestions and not a few additions, for whose liberal services the author is under great obligation. My thanks are also due to the Kanarese Pandit B. Rama Krishnaya, Munshi of the G. M. High School Mangalore, who assisted in reading the proof-sheets, and also to Mr. T. Maben, Assistant Teacher, G. M.
High School, for a list of legal terms. The printer and publisher deserve also a vote of thanks.

In conclusion the author desires to express his profound admiration for the supreme Kannada scholarship of Dr. Kittel's work.

Though the compiler is more sensible of the deficiencies and shortcomings of this work than any other person can be, he does not hesitate to confidently commend it to the public, for whom it will prove both instructive and useful, and he will be amply rewarded for his night-labours bestowed upon it by its appreciative and extensive use.

Hints and suggestions for improvement and enhanced efficiency will readily and thankfully be received.
